Welcome

WHEN THE "ALL WHITES" TURNED TO "BLUSHING PINK"

IT'S A GREAT pity, for both sets of supporters that tonight's match will once again be reduced in status by the demands of international rugby. Even without the international players engaged in tomorrow's match both clubs have sufficient strength in their squads to be able to play almost full strength teams but would it not be something to savour if the Courage League champions were able to take on the Heineken League Champions at full strength on a Saturday afternoon in front of a full house at the Recreation Ground or St. Helens, especially if Anglo-Welsh league points were at stake? The prospect is quite mouth-watering.

Two years ago the Whites went home from here blushing over their heaviest ever defeat (that is until the South Africans came to Swansea and ran riot last Guy Fawkes night. Talk about fireworks!). The shortage of players available to us that night was so acute that our coach Mike Ruddock came on as a replacement with about ten minutes to go. His proud boast ever since has been that Bath did not score another point whilst he was on the field!

Last season's game at Swansea was washed out of course but hopefully tonight's game will show that there are some very good young players in the Swansea squad. The forwards will be a mixture of experience and youth from the ageless Richard Moriarty to the talented young hooker Marcus Thomas, one of the fastest in the business. Look out also for young right wing Alan Harris who looks like developing into a fine "footballing" wing in the style of our old friend Tony Swift (still going strong we are pleased to see).

Here's to a good evening's rugby.
