OUR VISITORS.

A rugger club is fortunate if it has some players whose personality crystallises the spirit of the club, consequently gaining the interest and good humour of the spectators. Our neighbours, Bath, have always been rich in such players. The writer's experience goes back to the days of Buster Soane. He was the hero of the small boys and the joy of the grown ups and if he were absent, interest went out of the game. In thinking of the formidable Bath side of that time, his name comes first to mind and we have to make an effort to recall those associated with him,
